We would thus move our working hours into the better portion of the ewenty-four, and would not be so dependent upon the light company for such illumination as they deign to give us. We would have an hour more of daylight to work in and an hour of daylight is worth two of artificial light. Let us have more day-P. T.

Too Much Social Life at University?

Is there too much social life at the activities carried on to such an extent that students neglect their studies and defeat the primary object of their education? Evidently these questions require more than a hasty consideration. An answer without due deliberation will not do. A careful investigation or conditions and moring away; the students bring into problems at the university should the city fully $1,000,000 a year and solve the question,

University life is a complex life. It is made up of men and women with almost as wide range in temperament, likes and dislikes, as is to be found outside the university. It is composed of those who have desires for social life and those who would rather not have social life interfere with their studies. Not long ago one of the problems of university life was the problem of how to get more social activity; today the problem that seems to be confronting many institutions is one concerned with the reduction of social activities and the enconragement of higher scholarship. It is useless for any one set of individuals to try to regulate society in university life. Society activities will take care of themselves. It is for the individual to choose whether or not a certain society function demands his presence and by virtue of his presence or his absence that particular event is so much the weaker or the stronger.

Now, coming back to the original question: Is there too much social life at the University of Missouri? pears to be having full sway it is beof life. The fact that there is more society at the University of Missouri now than ever before reveals the fact that students are coming to realize the value of sociability in general cul- that if they hope to avoid premature the science department are engaged ture and education.
